- (4) [redacted] instructed to go into the next room where men checked all the induction candidates for proper limb function, ruptures, hemorrhoids, tapped chests and backs, checked reflexes, listened to breathing with a stethoscope, used a small flashlight to examine eyes and ears, checked tongue and throat (without a depressor), and asked about disease history and any physical ailments. 25X1
- (5) [redacted] upon completing the examination, were instructed to dress and wait in the same room. At 1800 hours a man in uniform gave them a two-hour political indoctrination lecture. [redacted] it was intended to impress and warn induction candidates as to their future obligations and to inspire them to faithful service. 25X1
- (6) At 2000 hours the entire group was taken on foot to a club, location and other details unknown. Here they were given political literature to read, and at 2230 they saw a performance by some entertainers who sang and danced. They then received an orientation lecture on their future obligations. This lasted about ten minutes. After this, they were given their registration certificates and were told to return to their homes and await further orders. 25X1

- (3) The group was then instructed to go into another room where their eyes were examined with a light. They were then required to read an eye chart. Color perception was tested with charts made up of colored dots that formed numbers and letters.
- (4) Next the men were instructed to go individually into another room. Here a man looked in their ears with a light. Then this same man placed a wooden, horn-like instrument against their chests and listened. A woman then tested their hearing by whispering numbers from across the room. After this, another woman checked their blood pressure.
- (5) The men, upon completing the examination, were told to dress and were then marched to a hospital one kilometer from the draft board. They were told to remove their clothes to the waist, and their chests were then examined with a fluoroscope. After completing this last examination, they were told to dress and to return home.

- (6) [redacted] the class of 1929 was called for service [redacted] reported to the draft board [redacted] 30 [redacted] inductees, for a physical examination. [redacted]

- (7) The physical examination was the same as the previous examinations. After the fluoroscope examination at the hospital, the group was returned to the draft board building and assembled in two ranks in one of the rooms. All the inductees who had passed the physical examination were given alerts for induction. Three of the group of 30 were rejected (see subpar A 1 e). [redacted]

the category of the individual's service depended mainly upon the requirements at the time. Part of the class of 1928, called in 1949, was assigned to three years labor in the mines in lieu of military service. This included an undetermined number of females. The labor in the mines was compulsory and desertions were punished in the same manner as military desertions. Of the 1929 class, called in 1950, no one was assigned to labor service, and no women were called. Later on the 1928 and 1929 year classes were called at the age of 20 instead of the legal age of 19 because there was a surplus of men in the 1926 and 1927 year classes.

50 village women were called for some type of duty in the Summer of 1951.

the 290th Gds. Rifle Regt. in Mauer Oehling, Soviet Zone of Austria

- i. The train to Austria consisted of 46 cars. Each of 40 of these cars carried 34 replacements with some of the cars having an NCO in charge. These NCO's were all infantrymen, selected from the various units which trained the replacements to make this one trip and return. the train carried approximately 1,380 men.

- (1) The men slept on double tiers of boards set up at either end of the cars with eight to nine men on each tier. There was no bedding issued to the troops and the men slept wrapped in their overcoats.
- (2) Up to the Austrian border, the men were fed canned food, bread, cheese, and tea with sugar. After the border was crossed, the kitchen cars served buckwheat mush and tea. This menu varied only once after the border was crossed, and then macaroni was served.
- (3) The rest of the train consisted of two kitchen cars, two ration cars, and two carrying some type of unknown supplies.

j. The route followed by the train was as follows:
